BEN THORNTON IS REDUCED

The Detective Is Also Severely Reprimanded by the Board of Safety.

He Will Send in His Resignation-Tried for His Conduct in the Eyster Murder Case-An Array of Witnesses.

Detective Benjamin Thornton, the only colored member of the city detective force, was tried before the Board of Public Safety last night on charges of conduct unbecoming an officer, and of working detrimental to the interests of the State in the Eyster murder case. The trial attracted a widespread interest from the fact that Thornton is one of the best-known officers on the force, and that the actions he was charged with were in connection with the most celebrated criminal case that has been tried in this county for a decade. Mc-Afee and Parker were arrested by detectives Thornton and McGuff. There was some doubt at the time of the men's guilt, and Thornton freely expressed himself in the belief of their innocence, basing that belief on the investigations which he had made. The men were subsequently tried, found guilty, and are now in jail under penalty of death. During their trial, and before it, Thornton was said to have taken an active part in aiding the defense, and it was for that which he was tried. The charges were preferred against him by patrolmon Hart, Carter and Ward, all colored. and each stated that he had at various times conducted himself towards them in a manner that would indicate that he was jealous of the work which they had done in the case.

The office of the board was filled, last night, when the board convened, with all of the members present. Among those present were Mrs. Eyster, the widow of the man who had been murdered; Judge Prosecutor Holtzman and Dep-Prosecutor Cox, of the Crim-Court; Prosecutor Wright, of Police Court; ex-Judges Norton and Irvin, of the Criminal Court, attorneys John Duncan, W. A. Van Buren, John Reardon and Martin Hugg, who acted for the defense during the trial, and Terry Cullen and N. S. Byram, president of the Capital National Bank. There were beside a large number of colored people, many members of the police force and the usual number of outsiders. Before the trial began Thornton made the statement that he had a number of gentlemen to appear before the board as pharacter witnesses in his behalf, and that if the board would admit that his previous reputation for truth and verseity had been all that could be said for it, he would allow them to go home. President Hawkins. of the board, said that would be admitted, and Messrs. Doncan, Van Buren and Byram left the room, the others remaining and testifying later. The first witness called was patrolman charges against Thornton. His testimony was to the effect that Thornton had said to bim on several occasions since the arrest of the men charged with the crime that he aid not believe them to be guilty. and that Thornton had used language toward him that was profane and indecent. V .rd's testimony was almost wholly of a prieral nature. Thornton, who was con-6 sting his own case, frequently requested the board to make the witness confine him-self to the facts, and Ward showed a disposition to get angry at the interruptions. Patrolman Carter next testified, and his statements were similar to those of Ward, there being a point of disagreement between him and Thornton on what was said at the time he was met by Thornton and McGuff, on the day that Parker and McAfee were arrested, but it was nothing that had any great bearing on the case, Patrolman Hart was next put on the stand. His testimony was the same as that of the others, and on the crossexamination Thornton asked him if he had not made the statement that he had had a conversation with a Mrs. Easley, and had reported that she had told him that Thornton had told her that if Hattie Mitchell had kept her mouth out of the case Parker and McAfee would have been acquitted. This Hart denied, but admitted that he had had a conversation with the Easley

Deputy Prosecutor Cox, the clerk of the grand jury room, was next put on the stand, and his testimony was the most important of the whole trial. He said that when Thornton appeared before the jury to testify in the Eyster case, that he had started out by saying that he did not believe that his testimony would do the State any good. The witness then said that he went on to say that he did not believe that Parker and McAfee were guilty, and that he thought the wrong men had been cap-tured. He said that Thornton had talked in a queer manner about the witnesses, had said that one of them was a jailthat another had wheels in his head, and that another was a --fool. Mr. Cox also said that he had seen Thornton in frequent consultation with the attorneys for the defense during the trial, and intimated that he had disclosed to them the State's case, as they were familiar with it from the beginning to the end.

Mr. Cox was followed by Mr. Holtzman, who said that most of his knowledge of the matter was by hearsay, and he said in substance what had been told by Mr. Cox. Judge Cox and ex-Judges Norton and lrwin were then put on the stand, and each testified to the fact that as long as they had known Thornfaithful and concientious officer, and that never before had they heard of him doing Brate was working. This much had also been said by Messrs. Cox and Holtzman.

Patrolmen Ward, Carter and Hart in their testimony had said that the girl Hattie Mitchell had said that Thornton had come to her and asked her to swear that it was white men who had shot Eyster, she being about the only eye-witness to the event. She was put on the stand by Thornton, and she testified that there was not a particle of truth in the statement.

Hart also made the statement that a Mrs. Easley had told him that Thornton had told her that if Hattie Mitchell had kept her tongue out of the case that Parker and Mc-Afee would have gone free. She was put on the stand, and she said that she had never spoken to Thornton in her life. Hart was called back, and he that Hattie Mitchell had told him that Mrs. Easley had told her so. The Mitcheil girl then said that that was so. Mrs. Easley was called back and she said that it was a lie, but said that the Mitchell girl had said to her. "Being's them two niggers (meaning Parker and McAfee) is shooting off their mouths about me, I'll hang'em if I can."

Captain Splann, chief of detectives, testi-fied that he had had called to his attention the actions of Thorton, but did not know of his own knowledge just what he had done, except that he had said that he did not believe the men held for the crime were the guilty ones. Mrs. McAfee, the mother of one of the accused, teatified that Thornton had given no assistance to her son in any way that she knew of, and that she had not spoken to him for a long time. for the reason that she believed he had been doing all he could to get her family into trouble. Martin Hugg, one of Parker and McAfee's attorneys, and whom Thornton was charged with assisting, was put on the stand, and he said in the most positive and emphatic manner that Thornton had not in any way, either directly or indirectly, assisted him in the trial, but that, to the contrary, he had been so hard to get information from that both he and his partner had considered him uncourteous in the matter. Several other persons testified about a number of lesser things, among them Martin McGuff. who was Thornton's partner, and who said that, as far as he knew, the latter was conscientious in his work for the force. Thornton himself took the stand, and denied in a most emphatic mapner that he had intentionally done anything to injure the case that was trying to be made against the accused with the single exception that he had repeated to several that he did not believe the men to be guilty. He said that he believed the charges which had been preferred against him were done out of a jealousy on the part of the officers and said that they had acted in a manner that was not wholly right. He said that Carter had come to him during the preliminary trial and had suggested to him that they had better go to the girls, meaning the Spaulding girl and her associate with whom Parker and McAfee were supposed to have spent the night on which the crime was committed and who so testified, and get them to change their testimony or tell them that they would be sent to the workhouse. This was denied by

When the trial was concluded the members of the board retired to a private room. and remained in consultation for nearly an hour. It was about midnight when they came back in the outer office and announced their decision. It was that the accused be suspended for a period of ten days with-out pay, be severely reprimanded, and be reduced to the rank of a patrolman. Thornton declined to talk after the verdict had been rendered, either to say that he was dissatisfied or otherwise, and at once left the room. His resignation from the force will be handed to the superintendent in a few days.

DE PAUW TRUSTEES MEET.

They Hear Miss Nel-on and Mr. C'Hair, but Take No Action-Other Ma tars.

The board of trustees of DePauw University was in session all day yesterday at the Bates House. The chief business transacted related to the financial problem before the board. There are several changes probable in the preparatory department. but these were relegated to the local me bers of the board. Before adjourning the board listened to a statement from Miss Nelson and Mr. O'Hair, who were at the speakers of the evening, which was not allowed to graduate, concerning the incident that brought about this result. Miss Nelson said that some weeks before commencement season she detected malice upon the part of a faculty member and received evidence to the effect that the work of passing herexaminations was to be made especially trying for her. She said her purpose in using unfair means in the German examination was to make her paper so nearly perfect that nothing could keep her from graduating. Mr. O'Hair substantiated what Miss Nelson said, and made charges against Prof. Longdon of false and contradictory statements. The board took no action upon the testimony thus secured. Another meeting will soon be held.

Mere Rumor of a Mob. A rumor was affoat on the street last night that a mob from Haughville would go to the hospital and lynch Henderson. All the officers were instructed to call up the police station by telephone every balf hour, and did so until nearly 2 o'clock. At this hour the hospital reported that there had been no signs of mob violence. Superintendent Colhert left orders that if there appeared to be the least danger of a mob attempting ful style, the clear plot and the clever to take Henderson he be brought to the police station. Out at Haughville everything was calm and serene and there seemed to be no mob feeling in the suburb.

Minor Changes in Jail Plumbing. The question as to changes to be made in the plumbing in the new jail is bothering the commissioners a good bit just at present. Some radical changes are insisted upon by the plumbing inspector, and the commissioners are uncertain as to whether they will be made or not. They have decided to order some changes of minor importance, but will have another meeting to discuss the question before they give any decision in the others.

THE PRESS CLUB BENEFIT

Large, Fashionable and Intellectual Audience Greet the Authors.

Each Meets with Much Fevor, and Mr. Sherlev and Mr. Rilev Recalled-Fin de Siecle Point to Mr. Wallace's Strong Narration.

HE Press Club benefit last night at the Grand Opera House attracted an audience seldom equaled in an Indianapolis theater. It was composed of the flower of the city, socially and intellectually. That part of thereading public whose expression never deviates from prose was represented, and also those to whom poesy is one of the treats of life. The student of literature was there for the reason that

style, and their works will not soon be forgotten. The audience, ensemble, was a fashionable one, however, and evening dress was the rule. The costuming of the ladies in the boxes was elegant. The general effect was one of beauty. Without an orchestra to entertain the people until the curtain should raise, the audience was nevertheless good natured during the rather long wait for the event. When the curtain rolled up the audience wondered who would act as master of ceremontes. This office, as it soon proved, had fallen to the lot of Mr. O. R. Johnson, who valiantly, and gracefully, and with no little wit, performed his duty. Not trusting himself to extemporaneous expression, he his remarks in manuscript and read with facility. He indulged in a modicum of pleasantry directed well received, and then gave the andience some idea of whom the strangers on the programme were. In speaking of Riley he quoted a poem indited to him by his friend Rudyard Kipling. The public has only had one verse of this poem. Mr. Johnson's remarks were a feature of the programme. The first author to appear was Mr. Donglas Sherley, the story teller. He was greated very cordially, being personally known to many in the audience, though very few had ever heard him in the role of a public entertainer. He proved his right to be called such from the very beginning by saying he did not know why he should be served first on the menu card of the evening. From this he went into the narration of humorous stories, directed at the foibles of people. He related an incident showing how his first book was appreciated by the loving mamma of a simpering girl who, as told by the daughter to him, bought it for its binding to match the parior center table in terra cotta. His unwritten story, called "Perhaps," was then given with an elegance and charm that were irresistible. The story should not be allowed to remain "unwritten" forever. When Mr. Sherley tires of repeating it-his audiences, by the way, never will-be should then commit it to the art preservative. Its rich and graceword picturing have marked the author as one entitled to high literary rank. The story is one of society, original in its conception as it is refreshing in its picturing of the man and woman who find love for each other in a very unconventional way.

The story-teller finished amid a storm of applause, and on responding to the encore gracefully accepted a bouquet of flowers which was handed him from the floor of the theater. He then read from one of his works a sketch of a garralous maiden, en-titled "The Buzz Saw Girl." He captivated his hearers again by the apt description of the talkative girl, who runs rapidly into fantily secrets in the drain upon her for material for words. The speaker's powers of mimicry were used to good effeet in bringing out the characteristics of such a person. The sketch contained many subtle analyses of this type. Mr. Sherley was again applauded liberally when he closed. The second on the programme was Mr. Meredith Nicholson, of, this city. He read first a sonnet, brief, but breathing the spirit of poesy. The intellectual quality was predominant. "Shadow Lines" followed, and was well received, though the reading was not perfect. The audience much more enjoyed the picture in "Watching the World Go By." They were well prepared after hearing it to share the feeling of the Kansas farmer's wife, who, the poet said, bad written him on reading the piece of verse that it was a correct picture of her life. Other selections were given, concluding with parts of a more ambitious poem upon the subject of the "Soldiers' and closing reading, teemed with patriotic fervor. The treatment of the theme showed the full bent of the writer's powers in a splendid light. There was, however, a lack of confidence in the rendition of his lines which marred somewhat their force and beauty. The fault is one due, perhaps, to inexperience in such a role as that which he was sustaining before so large an audience. Nevertheless, the reception given the young writer and thinker was highly Complimentary.

General Lew Wallace was greeted with loud applanse as his well known figure and face appeared from the wing of the stage. He read from his forthcoming work a sketch containing the sermon of Serguis, Russian monk. delivered in the year 1452, in the Sancta Sophia, a celebrated church in Constantinople. This church was a wonderful work of architecture and the pride, the reader said, of the Byzantine world. It was indescribably beautiful, and on the occassion upon which the eloquent words of the Russian heretic were delivered, was filled with such an audience as the world perhaps will never see again. Here followed a description of the gray-cowled monks, with raiment of untanned skins, with uncovered necks and bared feet, keeling upon the stone floor ready to receive the sacrament. The picture was drawn with the same masterful success which marks that of the race in "Ben-Hur." There were two branches of the church represented among the communicants-the Latin and the Greek -between whom there was a radical and bitter controversy as to whether the bread in the holy rite should be leavened or unleavened. The controversy arose to such a pitch as the sacred elements were about to be offered. that the monks forgot their priestly character and fell to fighting in the sanctuary. The celebrant sought to queil the strife with a signal to the choir to sing, but it was in vain. Then a vision appeared from above, and Sergius, being a man resembling the earthy conception of Christ was taken in the illusion for the Savior himself. This he disclaimed, and then, as if touched with the divine fire of truth, he preached to the assembled multitude the doctrine of the "Lord's Creed of Two Articles in Nine Words," namely, "I believe in God and Jesus Christ His Son." He denounced the council of bishops who had not been content with the creed laid down by the Savior on earth, but had added to it. The sermon put into the month of the heretic monk was particularly apt for these days of ecclesiastical contentions, and when the work is published and read this portion of it will andoubtedly meet with much discussion. The audience was constantly made to feel that the truth as then preached by the monk is needed to-day. For his brave utterance Sergius was condemned and put to death for heresy. The narration of this story occupied nearly an hour, but was received with profound admiration. The theme, as well as the literary execution, fully sustained the reader's high reputation and sharpened the eagerness of lovers of good literature who were present for an early opportunity to read the work. Mr. Young E. Allison appeared trem the Wing of the stage almost a total stranger to his audience, but in the course of a minute everybody felt well accomminted with him and glad to bear him. He has a retiring. genuine way about him that makes him friends very readily. His stave presence was graceful and his words were witty and happily chosen. He road from his celebrated story. "The Longworth Mystery." It is a story descriptive of the life of newspaper men, and is accepted as the best one ever written. The audience was very appreciative, and the newspaper men present felt that the writer was one who delved deeply into the experiences of their everyday life. It was left to Mr. Allison, however, first to reduce these experiences into a literary form. Of its quality, the re-ception awarded the speaker spoke for itself. He will ever be welcome to an Indianapolis audience.

The last was Mr. James Whitcomb Riley. His appearance was the signal for applause that attested the firm hold he has upon the affections of the people. He first recited his "Thoughts for the Discouraged Farmer," an imperishable gem from the Benjamım F. Johnson days. The recitative execuartistic and happy that heavy applause Aunt Mary's" was next given with the same success. If there was any one present who could not realize the picture in his own past, he was to be pitied, but yet so complete was the vision made by the poet that imagination could supply what memory lacked. At the request of some yeteran friends in the audience, Mr. Riley recited "Good-bye, Jim, Take Keer of Yerself." This aroused enthusiasm beyond measure. The applause was so persistent that, though the speaker was affected by the feeling he threw into the rendition, he was given seant time to recover himself before returning to answer the rousing encore. The last recitations related to the love of children, in which field the poet met with the same success. He tried to quit with the story about the two small boys who teased their sister's beau into giving them a dime for reciting "Littie Orphant Annie," but it was not possible. Although nearly 11 o'clock, the audience would not be content until he appeared again. He recited the bear story to the infinite pleasure of all. The entertainment was also financially a success, yielding a gross sum of $778.
